THREADING NEEDLES Very often I have a hard time threading needles, especially the machine needle, because there isn't too much hand sewing I do. In my sewing classes, I always show how to cut the end of the thread on a slant This works for me.

Another way would be to apply a bit of hair spray or starch to the end of the thread. This stiffens the thread just enough to ease it through the needle's eve.

REMOVING STICKERS

It is often a frustrating chore to remove stickers and labels from household items. Trial and error process is necessary. Of course manufacturers and retailers should use materials that can be easily removed, but they don't.

When you have removed as much of the label as possible and find there is still the adhesive present, try removing as much of the label on tape as possible with your fingernail or a dull edge of a knife. Sometimes adhesive can be removed with a solution of warm water, liquid detergent, vinegar or ammnonia. Other suggestions include oil, fingernail polish remover and acetone. Depending on the surface, it may be possible to apply a generous amount of a commercial prewash spot remover on the adhesive. Cleaning fluid will remove some ahesives; however, cleaning fluid can also soften some kinds of plastics if left in contact with the plastic surface for a period.

You may have tub appliques which need replacing. Some are easy to remove, others are not. If you would like to know how to remove these appliques, call me and I'll send you the directions.

BAKING WITH HONEY

Products made with honey brown faster than foods made with other sweeteners. So when you bake products made with honey, set the oven temperature 25 degrees lower than what is indicated in the recipe.

CLEANING VARNISHED SURFACES

Clean and polish with this cleaner: three tablespoons boiled linseed oil, one quart hot water, and one tablespoon mineral spirits of turpentine. Mix ingredients. Dip cloth in mixture and wring out. Wash surface. Wipe dry. Polish with a soft cloth. Project adjacent surfaces from the solution. Caution: Do not heat this mixture -- it is flammable.

thinking of our fellowmen (and women).

The Alabama legislature is going back into the long-anticipated special session in a few days. We have fresh on our mind the statement U.S. Representative Richard Shelby made in town Monday when he quoted something we had read previously: "No man's life, property, etc., is safe when the legislature is in session." The bill that bothers us most is the proposal by Gov. Wallace to remove the unemployment tax from both employees and employers. Right now we are all paying a surcharge added by the state because the unemployment fund was depleted. Maybe when the dust settles we will find that what they really want is to remove that surcharge and maybe the small tax charged to the employees. We expect the teacher pay raise to pass and also for politics to settle the education bond problems, and a capital outlay bond issue to pass, even though it won't please either the public schools or the colleges. Politics being what they are, we wouldn't be surprised to see the pay raise bill for tax collectors and assessors get tied up in the swap-outs and not pass. We have no real reason for saying that except that politics take funny turns.

We ate lunch at the Elba General Hospital last Friday as part of their continuing effort to develop a good rapport with the community. Actually the most important thing to me was the good food. We have all heard about how terrible hospital food is, but take my advice and eat in that room where they conduct classes for staff members, let Debbie Curran pour your tea and it will be good . . . you see she is a college-trained hometown girl that "done good".

Hospital Administrator Joe Claypool pointed out some of the many problems that are unique to the small rural hospitals, and how they are working with them. Some are problems we must live with, but others can be overcome and they are working on these every day, Claypool said. We were interested in the fact the hospital complex has requested a certificate of need to add 55 beds to the nursing home. They are adding eight just within the facility, right away. Claypool explained that they have over 100 people on the waiting list for nursing home beds.

"Ducks Unlimited" has organized a chapter in Elba. The kickoff meeting will be an eating event on Thursday, September 12. They will auction off some prime wildlife prints and other choice items. If an individual or family is interested in attending, they can call Kenneth Calhoun at 897-5764 during the day, or 897-3776 at night. They are going to eat roast beef with all the trimmings. We have attended Ducks Unlimited gatherings and it is an enjoyable event for husband and wife.

Today, it is frequently asked, "Is vineyards and fields." there any good news?" Everywhere we turn bad news bombards us with of Israel, Jeremiah, the prophet of seemingly unrelenting fury. We become people. cynical. Often the worst is expected and we are not surprised when we get the worst.

What is the good news for us One of the truly remarkable stories in the bible may help us. It is found in the 32nd chapter of Jeremiah. Jerusalem was surrounded by the Babylonian army under Nebuchadnezzar. Doom was almost a certainty. In only a few months what everyone was dreading became a harsh reality as Jerusalem fell to the seige and the leaders of the people were carried away into captivity. The destruction was almost final and nearly irreversible. Yet, just before the city fell, Jeremiah, acting on a message from God, arranged to buy a farm in Anathoth from his cousin Hananel. The farm, significantly, was located beyond the encircling, invading army. What is truly remarkable about this purchase is that the prospects of Jeremiah's ever living on the farm are almost nonexistent his own words: "So I bought a field, paying Hananel seventeen shekels of silver. I signed and sealed the deed of purchase before witnesses and weighed out the silver and paid him. Then I took the sealed deed containing the terms and conditions, and also the unsealed copy, and publicly, in the presence of my cousin Hananel and the witnesses who signed the deed, and as the prison guards watched, I handed the papers to Baruch. And I said to him as they all listened: 'Take both this

"That administrative efficiency is due, to a large extent, to the diligent efforts of public assistance eligibility workers in our department's county offices throughout the state," said Leon Frazier, commissioner of the state Department of Pensions and 'The low error rates reflect our continuing commitment to fiscal accountability and effective management, within the framework of available resources," he said. According to the U.S. Department of Health and Human services, 28 states stand to lose federal funds, because of exceeding the maximum error rate in fiscal year 1982, and 39 states failed to keep their error rates below the target error rate level for fiscal year 1983.
